Cranford is one of the better-known novels of the 19th-century English writer Elizabeth Gaskell. It was first published, irregularly, in eight instalments, between December 1851 and May 1853, in the magazine Household Words, which was edited by Charles Dickens. It was then published, with minor revision, in book form in 1853.

Cranford is unusual in so much as it is peopled by unmarried women but has no marriage plot as such. The only marriage takes place early on in the narrative, thereby clearing the way for a very different kind of story - one that privileges and celebrates the lives of these unmarried, and therefore socially redundant, women.
